

According to our members and domestic violence service providers,

You should Join DCADV because:

"More women are affected by domestic violence than by breast cancer and cervical cancer combined."

"Their DV101 trainings help the legal community really understand domestic violence."

"Membership fees help pay for their important systems advocacy and public awareness work."

"They include diverse voices in their work, including women of color, LGBTQ and faith communities, and victims with disabilities."

"They bring national expertise about violence against women to Delaware."

"Your contribution stays local."

"With 1 in 4 women affected by domestic violence, it is no doubt impacting the life of someone you care about, whether you know it or not."

"You should join DCADV because they provide vital support, training and expertise to professionals in the community working directly with survivors."

*-Marcey Rezac, LCSW, DVS,
Program Director
SAFE, People's Place*

"The Coalition is our 'go to' source for information about domestic violence and technical assistance as we provide services in the community."

"They understand that violence of all kinds—in our homes and communities—is related, and is preventable."

"They train police officers about how to keep victims safe."

"They are a true social change organization."

"DCADV is helping train the next generation of advocates."

"You will meet others who care about this issue and want to make a difference."

"You should join because the Coalition is instrumental in advocating for funding for Delaware providers on a local and national level."

*-Cherelyn Homlish,
Executive Director,
Contact Lifeline*

"Your membership shows the community and policy makers that the work they do is necessary."

"They engage men to be part of the work to prevent & end violence against women."
